No question arose in this case either of notice of fraud, as Mr. Brareton said the bills of lading contained no conclusive or binding representation as to the quantity of goods shipped, as each of them, in addition to the statement of the weight contained also the saving clause "weight, measure, and contents unknown," . He had carefully considered the cases cited and others, and tien. He was bound, therefore, to give judgment for the defendant. Plaintiffe had failed to show what weight of iron was put on board. The bills lading contained no binding representation y the defendant, and he had sworm that he had delivered all the iron put on board and that he knew nothing of the weights. In the absence of proof of what was put on board at Autwerp it was impossible for the Court to say there had been any short delivery, and therefore that part of the plaintiffs case failed. The judgment of the Court therefore was for the defendant, and he thought it must be with costs. The points raised were not new, and the cases reported were

The recent judgment on appeal of the great school for the study of the Corean language in Manchester cotton-sizing case, in an action grey shirtings; at Manchester, for selling them "groy shirtings" so sized as to become mildowed and discoloured, and in consequence unmarketable, will, it is to be hoped, exercise a salutary influence on the Manchester manufacturers of cotton goods for the China market. tiffs, with substantial damages by the Lord Chief Baron and a special jury, after a trial lating eight days in the Court of Exchequer. The case has now been argued again at great length in the Queen's Bench Division before Mr. Justice Field and Justice Manisty, on an application for a new trial which has been refused. Consider. ing the importance of the interests involved-our China trade in cotton goods has been steadily decreasing for the last ten years—the subject master of this trial and its result demand serious. attention; all the more so, perhaps, because Mr. Justice Field, in a very able summing-up of the arguments on both sides, seems in one parbioular to have ussumed, as admitted, a ground of defence for the practice of adulterating cotton goods, which tonds to destroy the moral effect of the judgment-a defence, too, which we venture to think erroneous in point of fact. The learned judge remarked "as to the use of the size, it is to be taken as admitted that for the Chinese market cloths heavily sized are preferred, and that, therefore, the sizing was an essential process in the manufacture of these goods." If this were true there would be somemanufacturers, that within certain limits the clay, and other foreign ingredients, in addition to the cotton fibre employed, was a recognized and justifiable means of meeting a special demand desire to that effect by both of the eastern om of the consumers, who were aware of the adulteration and preferred it. But we have no hesitation in saying that the whole weight of evidence supplied from Chinese sources and the trade returns shows the exact contrary; and that, so far from the Chinese preferring adulterated goods, the price of such deteriorated articles and the demand for them have been steadily decreasing for a long series of years; while the demand. for honestly made American goods in competition has as steadily increased. It is unnecessary to waste time in discussing the morality of the &c. The judge had to decide simply whether the introduotion of these foreign substances, either by reason of their excess or assentially deleterious observeter, so damaged the goods as to render thom numerkotable at Shanghai. And the judgment in both trials was in favour of the plain.

As regards the conclusion arrived at by the Chinese consumer in such cases, and its influence on the progress of trade, there is weighty evidence of indisputable character which leaves no doubt whatever that it is adverse to the manufacturers and shippers; and that " such heavity sized " and adulterated goods are not "preferred" YOKOHAMA. and is rapidly transferring his oustom to their and 7,928 pkgs, merchandise. fused to do so, and he said, "Don't he afraid, I'll return after a time, as the community is most it pays better to send honest cotton labrics, made &c. - For Yokohama 400 bags flour, 18 bags patible with the convenience of the merchants of up at the previous trial, might well say that this 50 boxes nutmegs, 16 boxes organs, 5 boxes

Even the thick solve are made of layers of cotton mgs. and their sedan chairs are often covered with cotton. Wadded cottons often supply the place of doors in their houses, to say nothing of the other uses of cotton in umbrellas, swnings, towels, &c. Yet the import from foreign vessels for the whole province does not exceed 1,000,000 pieges. If it were not for artificial causes, this province alone, which in 1878 took 232,000,000 needles from foreign ships, might well take ?0,000,000 pieces of English and American colton textiles. A couple of yards or so of cotton for ouch needle, or less than a yard for each inhabitant, would be no extravagant estimate. But it seems to be an essential condition of any such extension that the goods supplied shall be made of cotton, and not of size or China clay, which will neither wash por wear, and ultimately, as we see, will not even sell .-Poll Mall Gasette.
